

Dr Rachel Morley is a Consultant Clinical Psychologist who has over 25 years experience specialising in work with both adult and child victims of human rights abuses including sexual abuse and exploitation and domestic violence. She is currently the team leader of Compass in Glasgow which is part of the NHSGG&C trauma service. She works therapeutically with asylum seekers, refugees and trafficking victims of all ages who have experienced complex trauma including torture, sexual violence and trafficking for all forms of exploitation.

She contributes to awareness raising and policy initiatives in Scotland to help services recognise victims of trafficking more effectively and respond to their needs more appropriately. She is committed to working with survivors of human rights abuses in ways that allow the hearing and telling of stories that have been silenced, that support psychological healing and recovery and that challenge practices that allow violence and abuse to flourish.
