

Complex trauma is increasingly prevalent in mental health services in the United Kingdom. EMDR is recognised as an effective treatment for trauma. However with complex trauma clients the basic EMDR protocol needs to be modified so that clients do not decompensate. The workshop will outline structural dissociation, phased trauma treatment and using clinical material to demonstrate how the basic EMDR protocol is modified to work effectively with this client group.